

INDIGENOUS ENGAGEMENT

Skelton Brumwell staff have a breadth of experience and involvement in Indigenous engagement.

We believe in a meaningful approach to relationship-building and engagement among Indigenous communities, the public, government agencies, development proponents, and other stakeholders.

We can assist property owners, developers, municipalities, and Indigenous communities through planning and development review processes while concurrently facilitating community and Indigenous engagement. Capacity-building and developing long-term relationships are hallmarks of our work with Indigenous communities.

Skelton Brumwell staff have a strong network of contacts within and outside of Indigenous communities, which we can draw upon to assist in developing mutually beneficial solutions for capital planning, environmental management, resource development, and other projects.

We provide a range of services and expertise in undertaking Traditional Knowledge studies, facilitating relationship building, coordinating a range of stakeholders, and working with Indigenous communities to develop capital planning and community development strategies.
